GUATEMALA EARTHQUAKE

The Guatemala earthquake may be the worst natural disaster in the history of the Western Hempisphere, and is the most catastrophic in the recorded 38-year history of the Christian Children's Fund, an international non-sectarian voluntary agency based in Richmond, Va.

The Gatemalan Red Cross estimated death toll (Feb. 12) of more than 25,000 is exceeded in the Americas only by the eruption of Mt. Pelee on Martinique in 1902, which took 40,000 lives, and the 50,000 who perished in Peru's 1970 earthquake.

But the numbers of injured in Guatemala, estimated at more than 85,000, and the 1.2 million homeless -- nearly 25 percent of Guatemala's population -- are hemispheric records exceeded worldwide in modern history only by the great China floods of 1939 and the cyclone-driven tidal wave that hit Bangladesh in 1970.

In CCF's history, which began during the Sino-Japanese War and has survived numerous other wars and calamities, never have so many children in affiliated projects been killed, injured or left homeless by a natural or manmade disaster.

CCF in Guatemala, through its sponsorship program, assists 9,500 youngsters in 36 projects, of which 14 are located in the hardest hit provinces of Guatemala (city), Chimaltenango and Sacatepequez. Early estimates, as reported by CCF field personnel in Guatemala City, are that more than 100 children are dead, more than 300 were injured and at least 2,300 are homeless.

The toll may mount even further as communications are re-established with the widely-dispersed CCF - supported schools, day care centers and residential institutions. In addition, several teachers in the projects are reported killed, and many other injured or homeless. The CCF field office in the capital was badly damaged, as were homes of CCF personnel.

James Hostetler, CCF field operations manager, flew from Richmond to Guatemala City within 36 hours of the first tremors, and will remain on the scene until the situation is fully known, emergency relief efforts established and long-range rebuilding programs structured.

Dr. Verent J. Mills, CCF executive director, is coordinating the CCF relief program with governments and other agencies, and has appealed for Guatemalan emergency funds to CCF sponsors, contributors and the general public.

"The South 40" by James A. Smith Extension Agent

In talking with cattlemen I find that a number of producers have already put a Raigro implant in their steer calves. This is an important practice because it will add an additional 50 pounds at weaning time.

* * *

Last week I was looking at a group of cattle Carter Martin has on feed. Carter is doing something that a number of other cattlemen could do -- finishing them to slaughter weights.

Selling calves through an organized sale is a good method of marketing cattle, but where facilities and management capabilities exist it may pay to finish these cattle.

Last fall at the Feeder Calf Sales 350 lb. steers were selling from $30 to $32. This spring these same calves, when 300 pounds is added, they are bringing $39 - $41. I commented then that a person with a silo full of silage could pick up some good money for just wintering cattle and it worked out this way.

* * *

There are a few people losing calves. This is a costly program. Take time to see that vaccinations are up to date -- have cattle been wormed?

The cows -- when have you ever seen cow carcasses bring about the same as finished steers? They are doing it now. If there are cows that need to be culled, do it now. Cows are certainly bringing a reasonable price.

Cows, particularly those nursing calves are susceptible to grass tetany. Protect these cattle with magenesium oxide. They'll need about ½ ounce a day. You can mix mag. oxide with trace mineralized salt, equal parts. The problem is that mag. oxide is not palatible and cattle often fail to eat the required amount this way. You may have to mix ⅓ T.M. salt, ⅓ mag. oxide and ⅓ cottonseed meal.

There's been a lot of publicity about sodium nitrate being a cancer forming. We used this material in curing of pork products -- ham and bacon. Some work done at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology shows that saliva may contain 200 to 500 ppm of nitrate and certain leafy vegetables, celery and spinach, 1,000 to 2000 parts per million. It's interesting to note that meat must carry less than 200 ppm. Work done at the University of California shows that rats fed 2 parts per million did cause cancer but for a human to consume this much nitrate he would have to live to a ripe age of 750 years in order to develop symptoms.
